RICHMOND CAMPS.
Captain John Lamb, for the Third District, read a through and attractive report. He showed that there are now five camps in operation there—Lee and Pleaket Camps, in Richmond; W. B. The report, after deprecating all controversies between Confederates and complimenting North Carolina and her soldiers for the part borne by them in the Confederate war, proceeds to refute some of her claims, but only in so far as attempts have been made to "augment the fame of North Carolina at the expense of Virginia."

It shows from the official records:

Chaim that North Carolina was lifed.

(b) As to Gettysburg: The report discusses the claim of North Carolina that she was "farthest to the front" in the great charge of July 3d, 1862, from the "offleid reports," both Federal and Confederate; and shows from these reports that this claim is not sustained by the record. It quotes from the reports of Generals Lee, Longstreet and Laue; Colorels Lowrence, Shepherd and others, of the Confederates, and Generals Hancock, Webb and Hunt, of the Federals, all of which show that the only troops which penetrated the enemy's lines were Pickett's Virginiums and some of Archer's brigade, the latter composed wholly of wer. There was also presented a report of interest from Major John W. Johnston on monuments in Boteourt county, and a proposition to seed one at Vicksburg to the Lotetourt Artillery the only Virginia troops engaged in defence of that place.

DAVIS MONUMENT.

The following report was presented by Captain J. Taylor Stration, having been forwarded him by Mrs. Norman V. Randolph, chairman of the Central Committee of the Jefferson Davis Monument Association:

(d) As to Apporation: The report only says that the claim preferred by North Carolina here is also claimed by several other Southern States, and that the conditions at the surrender were such as to make it difficult, if not impossible, to determine what troops were really en-

6) The report then quotes from the report of the Confederate Secretary of War, in which he speaks of the army of Northern Virginia as one "in which every for all Confederates to share, and again deprecates all envyings and jestousie, "where all did their part so well." "On such testimony as this, Virginia can safely rest her title to share equally with her Southern sisters in the 'wealth of glory' produced by the war, and this equality is all she asks, or would have. She disdains to pluck one laurel from a sister's brow."

NORTHI CAROLINA COMPLIMENT. Fallowing the report, Dr. James Battle Everett, a North Carolinian, who married a Virginia lady, took the floor and commended the report, saying that Judge Christian had followed the temper of General Robert E. Lee and later, of Schley, as expressed by the latter after the battle of Santiago. "There is glory enough for all" North Carolinia and Virginia, he said, had always been together, and, please God, would always be together. There was no doubt, he sid, that North Carolina would reply to the report.

that North Carolina would reply to the report.

"But," said Dr. Everett, "we have enough to do without quarrelling among ourselves."

While Dr. Everett evidently did not fancy the report, he made no attempt to bolster up the claims made by cartain North Carolinians that "troops of that State were first at Gettvehure and Chickemauga and last at Appomatiox."

He, however, proposed and secured the adoption of a resolution expressing the unders develop of the veterans to the memories of John Letcher and Zebulon R. Vance, wer Governors of Virginia and North Carolina, respectively. This was later amended by Santtor John W. Daniel to include the immortal "Extra Billy" Smith, whose son, Colonel Tom Smith, of Warrenton, is a member of the Grand Camp and was present to-day.

At the Cheatres

The audience at the Academy last night enjoyed melodrama to their heart's content. The Fatal Wedding," as all good melodramas are claimed to do, provoked "laughter and tears." The piece has something of the flavor of "East Lynne," which statement is sufficient for one to readily believe that half the women in the audience came very near the point of crying outright. The piece is not full of thrills and sensational climaxes, only one of the act endings being on the order of the latter. This is the ending of the third act, when the villain is thwarted in his scheme. The play proved of absorbing interest, however, and the audience entered into the trials and wrongs of the injured wife in amanner that demonstrated they were in hearty sympathy with her.

The child in the cast, Frances Clinton, is well descrying of mention. She has a good many more lines than usually fail to the lot of these little people of the stage, and she had a pat way of reading them that was wonderfully pleasing. The performance seemed to thoroughly please the audience, and the "gools," who don't often get a chance at the Academy, made the most of their opportunity last night.

New York theatre successes with their **********

New York theatre successes with their original players in entirety are not so unusual in this section as to be particularly remarkable. They are, nevertheses, sufficently uncommon to invite a cordial welcome and substantial support. It is to be observed with satisfaction that Comedian Henry E. Dixey is bringing to his energement at the Academy to-night, to-morrow matinee and night, the same company and production of "Facing the Music," the new comic success with which this admirable artist is reported to be reneating his famous vogue in "Adonis." The Philadelphia Ledger said of the play ast week:

For her coming engagement in this city Miss Amelia Bingham is to present her latest success. "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," by Clydo Fitch, which ran for three months at the Frincess Theatre, New York. "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson," which a new to the the reason of the states months at the Princess Theatre, New York. "The Frisky Mrs, Johnson," which is new to theatre-goers here, deals with the American colony in Paris. Mr. and Mrs. Frank Morley are an American couple, who are in the position typical of many couples in this commercial day and generation: Mr. Morley is immersed in business, and Mrs. Morley though she desires her' husband's attention, thinks half a man by better, than none and so filtre desperately with a bluye English lord. Her slater, a lively, but generous hearted widow, evidences to shield her from the consequences of this entanglement and is forced by circumstances to shoulder the filtration herself. This threatens to work harm on her own love affair with a younger brother of Morley. Eventually the true culprit confesses her misdeeds, and the play ends with the peal of marriage bells in tune for "The Frisky Mrs. Johnson." The actressmanager will bring the entire production, both as regards scenery and accessories, from the Princess Theatre, New York, and the engagement is announced Monday and "A few years ago." said Manager Mc-

Tuesday, with matinee Tuesday.

"A few years ago," said Manager McKee, of the Bijou Theatre, "the people were clamoring for vaudeville. They got all they could stand, and we have many demands for it now. The call this season is for melodrama, affording an opportunity for the presentation of specialtics—as was done for years. We are getting the best attractions possible in order to satisfy the public. Take the play we have on this week—"Only a Shop Girl."
Have not had better audiences at any time since the house opened. One thing is certain, we will at all times try to blease the public, and to give the best entertainments that we can secure.

"Only a Shop Girl" will be seen four times—to-day and to-morrow, at the matinee to-day and to-morrow, at the matinee to-day and again to-night and at the matinee Saturday and the closing performance at night.

This musical comedy, which is playing to good business at Norfolk this week, will come to the Bijou for a week's stay beginning Monday, with the usual matinees. The plot is sandwiched between a series of nusical numbers, with enough glimpses to keep from being lost to sight. The dances are said to be pretty, the the chorus young and lively.

It was about 6:40 when the alarm came n from Twelfth and Main Streets, and the light that shot upward from the old Dispatch building illumined the vicinity brilliantly. In a few moments all the streets surrounding the corner were streets surrounding the corner streets jammed with humanity, and the clang of the gongs of engines and trucks and hose carriages created a great noise. Early arrivals found the flames apparently raging angrily and furiously from bottom to top in the rear of the four-story brick structure, and the entire building being lighted from end to end by the ascending flame, created the impression that the building was hopelessly doomed. The firemen got to work in a few moments, and in a few more had materially changed the aspect of the situation. The greater portion of the blaze was snuffed out like a candle, but the fire was forced upward, and was a trillo hard to get at there. The fire escape was lowered on the Twelfth Street side, and a stream of water was taken up into the building from the Main Street front.

The flames started in the rear on the lower or second floor, and shot upward through a small; elevator shaft, which served as a flue. Engines 2, 3, 4 and 7 and trucks 1 and 2 responded to the alarm, and all were soon pumping water into the building at such a rate as to crush out the flames. It was only fifteen or twenty minutes before the blaze was fully under control, but it required nearly an hour to fully extinguish them. LOSS NOT SERIOUS.

An examination of the building after the fire made 1 accorner that the loss would not be serious.

On the first floor Mr. Frank W. Danner, agent of the Equitable Life, had recently handsomely fitted up his office, and this has been considerably damaged by water and smoke, but not so seriously that he will not have his place open for business to-day as usual. Mr. Danner's loss is fully covered by insurance.
